“ Condolences to this family and prayers for peace and healing. I didn't know the Watson family but wanted to share. Military life is very very difficult especially for the spouses and there just isn't enough help to go around. It's so sad the help was not there in time for Tristen. RIP dear Tristen. Take good care of your babies in Heaven.

“ Though I do not know this family personally, but as a fellow human being, wept deeply watching the very touching video tribute. As a Pastoral Counselor who specializes in grief, loss and trauma, please know that Suicide Grief remains one of the most difficult types of grief to work through and heal from. The forever unanswered questions, the guilt, the self-blame, the anger at Tristen and others, the would've-should've-could've videos endlessly rewinding and RE playing in your minds. These are normal. Do not blame yourselves. If you must, own your part only. But in the end, It was Tristen, not you, who made the final choice herself, it was no one else's. She decided it was her only choice to stop the pain. Those who commit suicide wanted to stop the pain and believed they had run out of options. But beyond that, your grief is compounded by murder and that is further compounded by the fact it was children. One whom you knew well, loved deeply, and had dreams for. The other, you never met, but loved anyway, and joyously anticipated her grand debut in June. Their loss makes no sense and likely never will. Please seek a compassionate counselor, a support group, your clergy, church family-anyone who will offer silent supportive presence, a listening ear, warm loving arms, shared tears, without judgment, cheap cliches and advice, meaningless analysis or any other thing that makes this unwelcome journey harder. There are people who will offer worthless, wounding words and empty promises such as “If there's anything I can do for you...”.

Rev. Carlene Appel, MDiv., PC, SC, CERC - February 03, 2020 at 01:26 PM

“ Say yes and make them make good on their offer. Tell them what they can do for you- a cup of coffee, mow your lawn, a week's worth of dinners dropped off at your place, help write thank you notes. Or just sit quietly by my side without saying words. Nobody knows exactly what you are going through, but many you don't know across the nation walk with you and pray for you. Derrick, if you were deployed and in combat, all of that pales in comparison to what you are going through and living through ever since you got that knock on the door that no one ever wants to get. It's a duty that I, as a Police Chaplain am charged with performing. Please, seek out counseling and support. Take very good care of you if you ever hope to get through it. You can't make it alone. I pray that you and your family somehow, someway feel God's loving arms around you, weeping with you, through others who will be the hands, feet, eyes, and ears of Jesus, coming alongside of you in support. You are not alone, Derrick. My deepest condolences. Feel free to reach out to me for support anytime.
